511 RIVER STREET.

The custom of drinking stimulating beverages is one that at least bears the mark of antiquity, and many and bitter have been the arguments for and against the custom. We do not in this brief review intend to defend our opinion or seek to antagonize those who have views contrary to our own experience, and the custom that has obtained for ages in the old world. Our country cannot be said to produce better people physically or mentally than those reared under a similar civilization, such as Germany, England, et al., and yet these countries may be considered as the home of liquor of every kind; and especially in Germany and England, malt liquors are used almost universally as the daily drink by the bulk of the population. In the face of this, who shall have the temerity to gainsay the mental and physical superiority of these nations? Were the logic of some of our temperance apostles true, the inhabitants of Germany—instead of attaining the proud eminence that they have attained—would, through the harmless habit of drinking beer, have become the most degraded people. Facts are however stubborn in their nature, and so Gambrinus is still hale and hearty, and very able to cope with any soda water devotee we ever saw. Since that beer has become a necessity in the lives of so many of our citizens, it behooves them to select with caution the particular beverage they drink, least in these days of adulteration, they may be decoyed into using some articles possessing very deleterious qualities. No higher recommendation could be asked than that of the intelligent public and that has unanimously and unqualifiedly decided that the beer brewed by C. Kern's Brewery, of Port Huron, Mich., to be of the very highest class and absolutely free from all ingredients likely to effect the health, as it enjoys an inevitable reputation, for the quality of its brew and the uniform standard of excellence maintained for its beer. The Brewery possesses all the necessary qualifications to win success, and as regards skill, capital, care and intelligence every requisite is at hand. The appliances and machinery used are of the latest improved patterns, and especially adapted for the scientific brewing of lager beer. The buildings occupied are large and commodious, and every labor saving device has been introduced which places them in a position to promptly meet the growing demand for their justly celebrated beer. Their celebrated brands are Pilsner and Kern's Favorite. A representative enterprise, ably managed and conducted upon a plan of broad and liberal principles and honorable policy, it is one of the most creditable business factors of the city.
